Theories of Change

Theory of Change: Indigenous Peoples

The opportunity: We are all responsible for the future. Grounded in the Truth and in pursuit of Reconciliation, a more equitable and just society is needed. We all have the opportunity to share, listen, reflect and act in support of healing relationships.

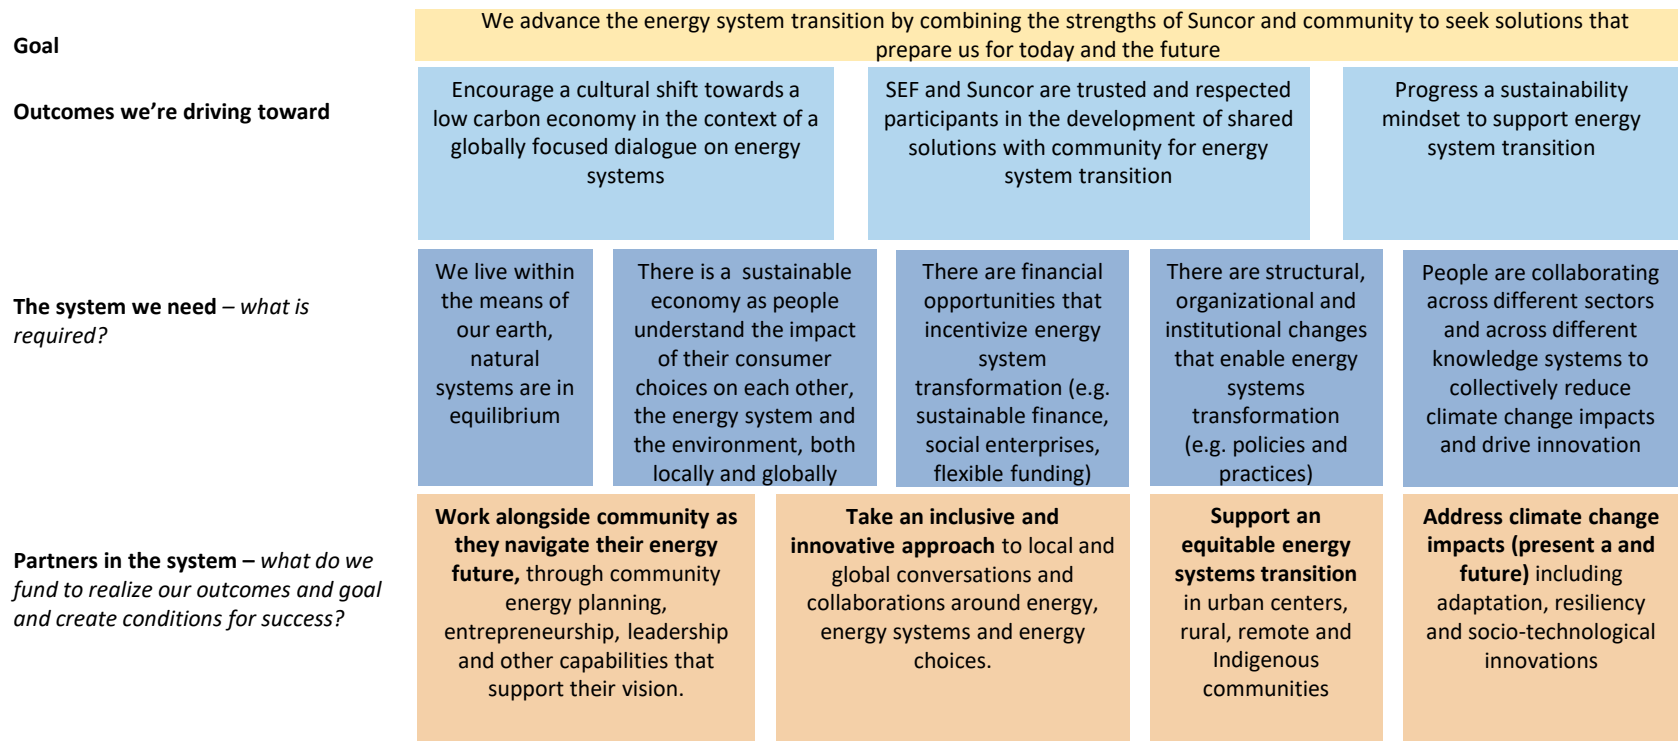

Theory of Change: Community Resilience

The opportunity: For a variety of interrelated social, economic, and environmental reasons, communities are changing. There are both challenges and opportunities within change, and complexity. No one person or group can create or implement solutions: individuals, organizations, groups, and sectors will be stronger together.

Theory of Change: Energy Future

The opportunity: The impacts of climate change are real, as is the growing demand for energy. We are collectively responsible to improve the way we consume and produce energy and understand the impacts of our choices locally and globally. Energy systems transition is grounded in social, ecological and economic wellbeing.

Theories of Change: Connections & Intersections

The words around the diagram indicate the intersections of our three theories of change.
